BULLETIN NUMBER 3

OF

The Free Library of Philadelphia

PREFACE

THIS is a small contribution to one of the great wants among bibliographical works, a list of the first lines of poems.

What reader or librarian has not experienced weariness in the search, oftentimes of hours, for a poem he is asked to trace from a partly remembered first line or from some person's dim recollection that such and such a poet has somewhere written some verses relating to some particular subject. If this is a true experience with reference to most poets, still more difficult has it often been found in the case of Robert Herrick, the greater number of whose poems are written in two lines. In Herrick's case, too, there is not even an alphabetical index of "Contents," and to search through fifty octavo pages of "Contents," arranged merely after the order of the poems, imposes much trouble.

Some time since, Mr. Richard E. Wilson, a member of the Free Library staff, commenced a list of first lines and index of subjects. It seemed a useful undertaking and one likely to be appreciated in Free and Public Libraries and by every reader and lover of Herrick's poems. The result is now issued, and many thanks are hereby tendered to Mr. Wilson for the original thought and much industry in drafting the BULLETIN, and to Mr. John Ashhurst for his assistance in making the result as accurate as possible and for the addition of a Glossary.

Considerable delay in completing the BULLETIN was caused by the fire in the publishing house of J. B. Lippincott Co. The Index of the

PREFACE.

First Lines was in proof and the whole of that labor was lost in the fire with, also, much of the manuscript of the Index of Subjects. The work had practically to be recommenced, and when it is remembered that the time that can be bestowed on such work as this is very limited, it is hoped that the delay which has been so unavoidably incurred will be excused.

It is not out of place to notice that a table of first lines alone would not make a complete work, because some of the Poet's couplets are incomplete without their titles. Instances are numerous, but it may suffice to call attention to two in Vol. II (at pages 248 and 271) entitled respectively "Good Christians" and "The Virgin Mary," where the titles and the couplets must be read together to be intelligible.

The following Indexes are made for use with the two-volume edition of Herrick's poems published by Messrs. Little, Brown & Company in 1856, and forming volumes 51 and 52 of their useful edition of the "British Poets."
